Preppers – doomsday preppers as they’re called – were long ridiculed, hounded, and caricatured, but found their footing in the midst of a mere mid-level crisis. Their ‘tactical’ outfits, food buckets, weapons, paracord jewellery, and, yes, their concrete and steel bunkers – all of which seemed to verge on parody in times of plenty – lusted in the sunset of an age brought to a close by a lipid and protein viral envelope.

The 1970s was a period of significant growth for what would be considered prepping by today's standards. Fresh off the civil unrest of the 1960s, the Vietnam War, and facing the new perceived threats prompted by the oil embargo and fears of environmental catastrophe, many pursued a "back to the land" movement, which is the equivalent to today's "off the grid" lifestyle focusing on ...

So effective is shortwave broadcasting that many nations regard it as a threat to their stability. The Soviet jamming of Voice Of America and Radio Free Europe broadcasts illustrates this point.. This "war of the airwaves," played out daily, gives anyone with a shortwave receiver access to a world of information and views not usually heard on local TV and radio programs.

A Shortwave Radio Can Give Preppers Peace Of Mind
Most preppers say they are about self-reliance and common sense and are quick to distance themselves from the "doomsday preppers" who are depicted on television shows awaiting the day most of the world's population is wiped off the map. "The vast majority of this is 'beans and Band-Aids,' not 'bullets and bunkers,'" Ramey said.
